

Preface

The idea for this book came from the Modern Church group, and I am very grateful to its General Secretary, Jonathan Clatworthy, for all his encouragement with the project. Ruth McCurry at SPCK has been an outstanding and patient supporter, and I am most grateful to her careful reading of the text prior to publication. Much of this book was written while I was on sabbatical at the College of St John the Evangelist in Auckland, Aotearoa New Zealand, and the warm hospitality and welcome of the faculty, staff and students made my time all the more enriching. Many of the insights in this book derive from conversations and encounters that I had during my time there, and in particular, I would like to thank Jim White, Karena de Pont, Irene Ayalo, Megan Herles-Mooar, Patti Lao-Wood, Petra Barrie, Ellen Bernstein, Emily Colgan, Richard Bonifant, Hone Kaa and Christopher Douglas-Huriwai for their cheerful and often challenging words. Colleagues at Ripon College Cuddesdon looked after my teaching in my absence, and grateful thanks are due to Michael Lakey and Hywel Clifford, and to Martyn Percy for his encouragement to take up the sabbatical opportunity in the first place. I would also like to offer thanks to Harris Manchester College, Oxford, and in particular its Principal, Ralph Waller, for their hospitality and warmth in offering me use of their facilities. So many teachers and students of mine, past and present, have inspired my love of the Bible, and this book is, in part, dedicated to all of them. My first interest in the Bible, however, came from my parents, James and Patricia Francis, who taught me that any reading of the Bible should be critical, creative and compassionate. I add to that list 'courageous', and I draw courage from my husband Myles, whose love and support are the foundations upon which I write. My link to Aotearoa New Zealand came through Jenny Te Paa, to whom I owe so much. Her words to me – to 'read widely, think deeply, and pray mightily' – resonate throughout my work, and I hope that the result is a fitting tribute to her tireless work for justice and theological education throughout the worldwide Anglican Communion.
